CBA created a series of landscape interventions, extending the principles of the architecture into the wider landscape of BP's Scottish Headquarters in Aberdeen for North Sea operations. The site wide landscape proposals included swales in the car parks (SUDS), extensive planting, lights and water features. The simple and elegant landscape response included groves of native tree blocks, set within a grid system, interlinked by high-tech formal water features and furniture. Further proposals made use of indigenous low ground cover species to reinstate slopes thus aiding the integration of the building curtilage into the immediate landscape.
